Periodicals

Concerns combat actions of the 1st Squadron, 11th Armored Cavalry Regiment on Sep 6, 1969, near Loc Minh. Includes eleven "lessons learned" points.

Barclay, C.N. Asian Combat Lessons--Do They Apply to Europe? Military Review 50:11-19 Mar '70.

Battle Lore. Army V. 22, July '67-V. 23, May '68
Regular feature, with after-action advice by soldiers who have served in Vietnam.

Author states that military managers of the Vietnam era "did not understand the kind of war facing them. They believed conventional approaches to combat... could easily subdue an ill-equipped and ill-trained guerrilla force in Vietnam."

Drew, Col Dennis M. Two Decades in the Air Power Wilderness: Do We Know Where We Are? Air University Review 37:2-13 Sep-Oct '86.

Soviet Perception of Air Tactics.

Compares the war in Vietnam to the American Revolution, examines lessons to be drawn from the similarities in the two conflicts.

Fulbrook, Capt Jim E. LAMSON 719. Prelude to Air Assault. USA Aviation Digest pt 1, 32:2-15 Jun '86; pt 2, The battle. 32:34-45 Jul '86; pt 3, Reflections and values. 32:2-13 Aug '86.
Author states that lessons learned from LAMSON 719 contribute more to the current and developing evolution of Army Aviation tactical doctrine than any other operational experience in the past 20 years.

For the United States, one important national security concern is the possibility that our military forces will be required to prop up a local government—Vietnam is the best example of this kind of commitment. While an unpleasant option, fraught with risks, it nonetheless cannot be overlooked.
This article examines the difficulty of employing force in this manner and proposes several lessons from our past experiences that seem applicable today.

"A careful examination of the past leads to rational, experience-based conclusions: our new doctrine should not be based on US forces fighting insurgents unless a US military government exists; we should continue a doctrine based on US assistance and advice to allies beset with the insurgent; and air range of options against insurgency should include mid-intensity, not low-intensity, offensive ground operations against those nations that sponsor insurgency."

Database

Joint Universal Lessons Learned System (JULLS). JULLS is a database of knowledge and experience intended to cover all aspects of joint military operations and exercises. Each of the lessons currently in the database has five parts: (1) Administrative Date, (2) Keywords, (3) Narrative, (4) Milestones, and (5) Source Information. A printer is available for saving the results of a search. Assistance in using JULLS is available from personnel at the reference desk.
