U.S. Trade Statutes: Expiration Dates and Mandated Periodic Reports to Congress

Summary

The Constitution gives Congress express power over the imposition of tariffs and the regulation of foreign trade. As part of this responsibility, Congress enacts laws including those that: establish tariff rates; implement trade agreements; provide remedies against unfairly traded imports; control exports of sensitive technology; and extend tariff preferences to imports from developing countries.

Over time, and under carefully prescribed circumstances, Congress has delegated some of its trade authority to the Executive Branch. Congress, however, has, in some cases, kept tight reins on the use of this authority by requiring that certain trade laws and programs be renewed; and by requiring the Executive Branch to issue reports to Congress to monitor the implementation of the trade laws and programs.

This report is intended to assist Congress in exercising its oversight responsibilities regarding foreign trade. It is designed as a quick reference guide on two key elements of U.S. trade statutes: (a) expiration dates for major trade programs and trade statutes; and (b) mandated periodic reports to Congress. To this end, the report provides this information in two tables. Table 1 includes expiration dates of programs or laws. Table 2 includes information on mandated reports to Congress by the Executive branch, as required under various trade laws.

The organization of, and information in, this report is based on the content and structure of the House Ways and Means Committee Print, Overview and Compilation of U.S. Trade Statutes, Parts I and II (2005). Together, these two volumes are commonly referred to as the House Ways and Means Blue Book, referring to the color of their covers. The Blue Book pulls together key information for Congress relating to the trade statutes.

Specifically, Table 1 lists expiration dates for the roughly 24 trade statutes or programs that include termination dates – which range from 2007 to 2015. It also lists reciprocal trade agreements, which have no expiration dates. Table 2 includes laws that require, in all, approximately 41 separate reports to Congress. The required publication frequency for most of these reports is typically either biannual, annual, or biennial.

U.S. Trade Statutes: Expiration Dates and Mandated Periodic Reports to Congress

Introduction

The Constitution gives Congress express power over the imposition of tariffs and the regulation of foreign trade. As part of this responsibility, Congress enacts laws including those that: establish tariff rates; implement trade agreements; provide remedies against unfairly traded imports; control exports of sensitive technology; and extend tariff preferences to imports from developing countries.

Over time, and under carefully prescribed circumstances, Congress has delegated some of its trade authority to the Executive Branch. Congress, however, has, in some cases, kept tight reins on the use of this authority by requiring that certain trade laws and programs be renewed; and by requiring the Executive Branch to issue reports to Congress to monitor the implementation of the trade laws and programs.

This report is intended to assist Congress in exercising its oversight responsibilities regarding foreign trade.¹ It is designed as a quick reference guide on two key elements of U.S. trade statutes: (a) expiration dates for major trade programs and trade statutes; and (b) mandated periodic reports to Congress. To this end, the report provides this information in two tables. Table 1 includes expiration dates of programs or laws. Table 2 includes information on mandated reports to Congress by the Executive branch, as required under various trade laws.

The organization of, and information in, this report is based on the content and structure of the House Ways and Means Committee Print, Overview and Compilation of U.S. Trade Statutes, Parts I and II (2005). Together, these two volumes are commonly referred to as the House Ways and Means Blue Book, referring to the color of their covers. The Blue Book pulls together key information for Congress relating to the trade statutes.²

Part I of the Blue Book provides overviews and explanations of the various trade statutes, under seven basic headings: Tariff and Customs Laws; Trade Remedy Laws; Other Laws Regulating Imports; Laws Regulating Export Activities; Authorities Relating to Political or Economic Security; Reciprocal Trade

¹ This report was prepared with the assistance of Jeanne Grimmett, Legislative Attorney, American Law Division, CRS.

² The Blue Book is available online (but not electronically searchable) at: Volume 1: http://www.waysandmeans.house.gov/media/pdf/109cong/wmcp/wmcp_109-4pdf and Volume II: http://www.waysandmeans.house.gov/media/pdf/109cong/wmcp/wmcp_109-5pdf.

Agreements; and Organization of Trade Policy Functions. Sub-categories within each subject area provide background on or description of a specific law or program, or a concept which cuts across various laws. Part II of the Blue Book presents the text of the respective trade laws that fall within these seven overall headings.

Specifically, Table 1 lists expiration dates for the roughly 24 trade statutes or programs that include termination dates – which range from 2007 to 2015. It also lists reciprocal trade agreements, which have no expiration dates. Within Table 1, the laws are grouped by Blue Book chapter and organized within each chapter by expiration date. Also included in Table 1 are some laws which have already expired which Congress may at some point reconsider, for example, the trade promotion authority component of the Trade Act of 2002, which expired June 30, 2007. Also included in the table are some laws which were passed after the 2005 Blue Book went to press. Hence, these do not include Blue Book page references. For most expiring laws, however, page numbers are included to reference the relevant sections in volume I and the statutes in volume II.

Table 2 includes laws that require, in all, approximately 41 separate reports to Congress. The required publication frequency for most of these reports is typically either biannual, annual, or biennial (every two years). Some of the required reports have become comprehensive well-known documents. In such cases, the actual title is mentioned in the table. These reports include the U.S. Trade Representative's National Trade Estimate Report on Foreign Trade Barriers and the Trade Policy Agenda and Annual Report on the Trade Agreements Program; the International Trade Commission's The Year in Trade: Operation of the Trade Agreements Program; and the State Department's Country Reports on Economic Policy and Trade Practices and Country Reports on Human Rights Practices.

There are two purposeful exclusions from Table 2. First, in general, reports mandated by Congress for “one time only” are not included. The exception to this is reports mandated by trade promotion authority, which required the “one time only” publication of a number of documents for each new trade agreement. Second, also not included in this listing are “if-then” (i.e., conditional) reports – that is, reports to Congress mandated only if a certain event actually occurs.
